Legarda turns down offer to run with Teodoro

By Michael Lim Ubac and TJ Burgonio

THE POSSIBLE TANDEM OF SENATORS MANUEL "MANNY" Villar and Loren Legarda for 2010 took shape yesterday as the latter closed the door on a teamup with Defense Secretary Gilbert "Gibo" Teodoro, the administration standard-bearer.

With Interior Secretary Ronaldo Puno pulling out of the vice presidential race, the administration's Lakas-Kampi-CMD was pressing Legarda to form a tandem with Teodoro.

To sweeten that offer, the ruling party said it was not averse to coalescing with Legarda's party, the Nationalist People's Coalition. It's actually the NPC's decision, according to Lakas-Kampi-CMD secretary general Gabriel Claudio.

"She continues to be a viable, desirable running mate to Gibo. That is certainly open and seriously considered by the party," Claudio said by phone on Friday night.

But Legarda is not biting.

"With due respect, gratitude and admiration for Gibo, I hope that he can share my advocacy and platform ... even as I stay with the opposition," she told the Inquirer yesterday.

WHEN YOU THROW A ROPE TO save people in crisis, that rope must not only be long enough to reach them, but also strong enough to withstand the pull of all their needs.

NO WAY, JOSE.

A group of doctors wants to exhume the skull of the national hero, Jose Rizal, so that they can "study and find out why he's so smart."

But Ambeth Ocampo, chair of the National Historical Institute, will have none of it.

"They can wait for my replacement [at the NHI] in 2010," said Ocampo, the historian and authority on Rizal who is also an Inquirer columnist.

He did not identify the doctors' group which petitioned the NHI, the agency tasked with conserving and preserving the country's historical legacy, to exhume Rizal's remains.

PDI bags 2nd Quill award for 'Read-Along 2'

An extension of the original session held at the newspaper's main office in Makati City, the Inquirer Read-Along 2 also brings together children, celebrities, role models and trained storytellers in an hour-long gathering but with one difference—it takes place in other cities and provinces.

Inquirer national editor Pergentino Bandayrel Jr. and Northern Luzon bureau chief Rolando Fernandez accepted the yearly award.

The Philippine Daily Inquirer is the only newspaper company to win Quill awards in the past two years.

"It has a different thrust from the original Read-Along. The sessions are held outside Makati and they have a distinctly regional or local flavor. The stories must resonate with the children's own life stories. Or they should echo the host partner's advocacy of a local or specific concern," said Inquirer research head and Read-Along coordinator Minerva Generalao.

As such, the books chosen for these sessions are written in the local language and the stories deal with regional heritage and concerns.

QUILL THRILL The Inquirer wins another Philippine Quill award for its Read-Along 2 (Inquirer Read-Along Across the Nation) under the social responsibility category. Holding the trophy is Inquirer national editor Pergentino B. Bandayrel Jr. He is flanked by Inquirer Northern Luzon Bureau Chief Rolly Fernandez during the awarding ceremonies held at the PICC in Pasay City, Thursday night. On the sides are [illegible] vice president for corporate communications.

The Inquirer Read-Along 2 won in the economic, social and environmental development category. Its precursor received a Quill award of excellence in the same category last year.

The Quill Awards are handed out by the International Association of Business Communicators (IABC) Philippines to honor outstanding corporate communications programs and tools.

Two Quills

From over 200 entries this year, the IABC gave out 35 excellence awards and 78 merit awards.

"We received a lot of entries this year, which only proves that the Quill is now the accepted industry standard of what outstanding communications must be," said IABC president Ray Anthony David in the awarding ceremonies held Friday at the Philippine International Convention Center (PICC) in Manila.

Four bureaus

The Inquirer Read-Along 2 was launched in November last year, tapping the newspaper's four bureaus in Northern Luzon, Southern Luzon, Visayas and Mindanao.

To date, the project has organized [illegible] sessions in [illegible] cities and provinces including Baguio, Laguna, Albay, Camarines Sur, Davao and South Cotabato.

Read-Along sessions were also held at Manila Ocean Park, Navotas Elementary School, Bantay ni Tondo and the New Bilibid Prison in Muntinlupa. They were well-received as some [illegible] children would attend each session.

Celebrity readers who graced the Inquirer Read-Along 2 sessions included actress Rojas Gallego (Bacolod), actress and model Angel Aquino (Baguio), actor Robin Padilla (South Cotabato), Defense Secretary Gilbert Teodoro (Davao), actress and singer KC Concepcion (North Cotabato), GMA 7 reporter Jiggy Manicad (Cavite), Energy Secretary Raphael Perpetuo Lotilla (Albay) and filmmaker Kidlat Tahimik (Baguio).

Going viral

The project has not only grown internally but has also encouraged other groups to form their own story-telling sessions.

In Bacolod City, the volunteers of Fantasea Camp Foundation, a Negros-based NGO helping children with cancer and serious illnesses, were so inspired by the project, they initiated their own version in December last year.

Three months after the Inquirer held a Read-Along in their school, students of St. Alphonsus Liguori Integrated School in Molino, Cavite, also organized their own version in their adopted community.

Read aloud, read with me

In Cebu, the Cebu Daily News partnered with the Rotary Club to launch their own "Read-Aloud" program, featuring story-telling sessions in selected [illegible] and malls.

In August, Volante Foundation also launched its own "Read with Me" program for their wards in their 12 residences located in various areas in Metro Manila.

most unlikely of partnerships—local government, an NGO and private organizations donating an endless supply of goods.

The relationship began during the night of the storm, when Craig Burrows, a British expat who runs the Joint Students Christian Foundation's Mango Children's Home and Pepaya School, used these buildings as an evacuation center. Thousands fled here to take shelter.

When his team started to think about survival logistics, they discovered they had no electricity and ran out of food and water. Turning to the local government for help, they made radio contact with San Jose Barangay Captain Roger Frias.

Burrows describes his first interaction with Frias which gave him the first hint that there was something different about this local politician.

"Instead of asking me for money or giving me excuses, he told me I can have an ambulance and that I can ferry as much fresh water as I wanted to the evacuation center," Burrows says.

Frias also went to the school to see the situation for himself. He made no speeches, he just wanted to check on everyone. What happened next showed that he was a man of determined action as well as kind words.

A partnership is born

Burrows and his team went to distribute water in the community in the middle of the night in order to avoid the crowds. They were shocked and amazed at what they saw on the road.

"There was [illegible] dressed in jeans, T-shirt and a cap, handing out water [illegible] house to house. Here this was exactly what we were doing, he did one side of the street and we did the other. And that was how the partnership started," Burrows recounts.

Thanks to a constant supply of donations being organized and delivered to the evacuation center from Manila by the British Women's Association, Springboard Foundation and the International School of Manila (ISM), relief goods reached the barangay's 35,000 people in need.

He wants to serve

Burrows worked side by side late into the night with Frias who showed his true colors—this barangay captain simply wanted to serve his people.

On the second night of the storm, it started to rain heavily and the possibility of flash floods became a concern. Burrows looked for Frias at the elementary school evacuation center and expected to see him issuing orders out of the vehicle.

"But when I got there, I found him using the ropes given by ISM reaching his staff how to rig them up and use them in an emergency. I thought this guy is a hay [illegible]. Most people are sleeping and here he is preparing," Burrows says.

Emotional support

"Cap Rog" to his community refers to him, also offered emotional support to his people when the time called for it. When Frias' rescue team reached a particular squatter relocation area, they found a room packed with pregnant women and children taking shelter from the rains. It was clear they needed to be evacuated but as they did not know where they were going, they were reluctant to move, worried about their houses and relatives.

"He was so gentle and respectful in convincing them that they would be safer if they leave, than their lives were more precious than belongings," Burrows says.

Although Barangay San Jose was very badly damaged, when Frias found out that the other barangays were worse off, he did something very unusual—he offered them help.

Councilor Albert "AQ" Quiles-Fernandez, who has worked closely with Frias on many relief efforts, points out that in her nine years of political service, it was the first time she had seen one barangay extend volumes of support to another.

Different experience

Burrows has lived for 20 years in the Philippines and worked with NGOs in many disasters in different areas. The partnership that developed between him and Frias has been the complete opposite of his previous experiences.

Having worked with local political figures, Burrows says they normally want to be seen as doing everything.

"They ask us to leave them our goods and they will distribute them. I never agree to this and sometimes we are left with relief goods that we can't distribute," Burrows says.

In contrast, Frias has gone of his way to make sure the relief goods would be distributed fairly and with no ulterior motives. He knows that if the distribution ever became politicized, the flow of relief goods would stop.

Like family

If Frias treats the 35,000 families of San Jose with tender loving care, it is because he considers the barangay as part of his family. To the surprise of most everyone in local government politics, he has no interest in running for higher office. Although his political party has asked him to run for vice mayor, he has chosen to run for his third and last term as barangay captain.

"Continuing in a position which is hands-on is important. I want to leave a legacy in my barangay. I will establish certain programs and activities that will start a system which can be continued after I leave," Frias explains.

Under his leadership, the barangay budget increased from P5 million to P45 million and has 22 vehicle patrols. And this is just the beginning. His ambitions for the future include a youth and recreation sports center, as well as health and emergency service programs. Since the barangay level is the smallest unit of local government, he feels a great responsibility to provide basic services to all of his people.

"They should have peace of mind and be able to go out and be safe. Many of these people voted for me. I must give back to them and not let them down," Frias says.

Mutual benefits

The mutual benefits that occur when an NGO-local government partnership is formed during a crisis are innumerable.

Burrows says because of their close coordination, they were able to immediately identify the biggest needs of the community. "When you don't work closely with community or have access to a community organization, you don't always know [what they need] and who the real victims are."

Given the great shortage of resources available from government, Frias and Councilor Quiles-Fernandez are grateful for the privately donated aid.

"Without aid sent by these organizations, we would only be able to give 20 percent of what we were able to distribute," Frias says.

"We feel lucky [Burrows] chose to work with us as there were so many in need. Maybe the only thing we can give back is to distribute goods efficiently," Quiles-Fernandez adds.

Lessons from the storm

Frias hopes everyone will learn from his experience.

"Local government must trust the NGOs and be transparent with all things. It's important to work honestly, coordinate with them and respect them. We must work together and not against each other," he says.

Burrows summarizes what he sees as the greatest lesson for the future: "Our foundation (www.asc.org.ph) is just one small strand. By joining with others—two local politicians and a barangay team—we joined individual strands to form a rope. This rope has reached out farther than we could ever have dreamed and saved lives."

Metro's lone entry makes it to Boy Scout awards

For this high school senior, helping others is a way of life

By Jeannette I. Andrade

SPENDING HALF OF HIS LIFE AS A MEMBER OF THE BOY SCOUTS of the Philippines and living up to the organization's slogan, "laging handa" (always ready), still, nothing quite prepared George Tanlimco Jr. when he found out he was named one of the Ten Outstanding Boy Scouts (TOBS) in the country.

"I was shocked. It has always been my dream to be one of the TOBS, but I never expected I would get the award," a beaming Tanlimco told Inquirer.

The 16-year-old senior high school student of the Chiang Kai Shek College (CKSC) and Troop 88 senior crew leader was the only Metro Manila bet chosen to join the elite group of national scout awardees in ceremonies held at the Makati City session hall last Oct. 1.

Tanlimco said that even as a cub scout in his elementary years, he was inspired to do his best by his scout leaders.

He started out as a cub scout when he was a Grade 1 pupil at the CKSC to have a sense of belonging in his new school. "I was new at CKSC. I wanted to make friends," he said.

Gaining confidence, he took a more active role in the CKSC scout center when he reached the fourth grade.

"I learned so many things as a boy scout. We were taught practical lessons and received an informal education outside the classroom," Tanlimco said.

"We were exposed to different things not familiar to us in a formal classroom setting, and we were told to go beyond the daily routine," he added.

The CKSC scout center is one of the most active scouting institutions known nationwide for producing top boy scouts.

CKSC dean of student affairs and scout center coordinator Judelia Yap said they saw Tanlimco's potential even as a cub scout in the 4th grade.

OUTSTANDING Boy Scout George Tanlimco. Scouting is forever.

Patience a virtue

"One of the virtues we saw in him was his patience," Yap told Inquirer, pointing out that they observed how the senior high school student could handle a class of 40 grade school pupils without losing his temper even once.

Yap said the centers practically "groomed" Tanlimco to be a TOBS as soon as they saw he had the makings of one.

"He is good in academics, active as a scout, and he has been joining international and national events in scouting," the school official stressed.

"We are always looking for authentic boy scouts and George is exactly that type of person," the CKSC scout center coordinator said.

Yap pointed out that there are not that many scouts at the CKSC. Out of 1,600 high school students enrolled in the institution, they have only 80 active boy scouts.

Assistant scout center coordinator and assistant English department supervisor Esperanza Flores emphasized that it was Tanlimco's excellent communication skills and good academic background that clinched the nomination in his favor.

"He had no difficulty with the language. I just told him to enjoy talking during the interview for the TOBS potential awardees and sure enough, he topped that portion of the judging," said Flores, who coached Tanlimco for the interview.

Among Tanlimco's achievements recognized by the TOBS was his organization this year of the sixth book campaign of the CKSC scout center.

As Troop 88 senior crew leader, he helped kick off the Give me 5 for 5 charity project that brought donations of school supplies to the Jose Rizal Memorial School and the National Training School for Boys.

Tanlimco, likewise, took part in organizing the free medical and dental clinic at CKSC, a project sponsored by the school's social studies club and the Manila Binondo Lions Club.

As if this were not enough, the Metro Manila TOBS award recipient, since 2005, has been taking part in the annual international coastal cleanup campaign. Under the Scout Rubber Corps, he also participated in its pilot project at the Central Kalinga-an in Pinagsama, Taguig City.

The teenager also provides assistance to different organizations in need of security services, including the Association of Philippine Volunteer Fire Brigades Inc., the Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, the World Bank, the Sangguniang [illegible], and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (Unesco).

Out of 25 candidates from different regions in the country, the CKSC scout center fielded two candidates to go through the rigorous process of elimination in the local, regional, and national levels.

Judges in the local and regional levels included the Department of Education (DepEd) supervisors, the program and training commissioners, and the president of a civic organization.

Judges

The national board of judges was composed of members of the national Boy Scouts of the Philippines (executive board and the DepEd), as well as the TOBS of the

The 'witches' of Salem

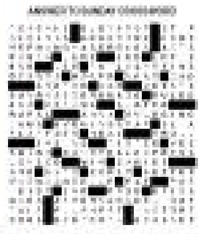

No other city takes Halloween as seriously. But, apart from cheap scares, the author has another interest–Nathaniel Hawthorne and The House of the Seven Gables is located beside the Salem Harbor where sailboats bob up and down the turquoise waters while seagulls roam the skies. Garden chairs clustered around the lawns made me imagine the characters in the novel sitting their afternoons out in the shadow of their ancestors' haunted home.

Inside, the house has been beautifully restored as closely as possible to its former glory. A hidden staircase leads to one of the gables. In the dining room, the table is laid out with wine glasses and vintage plates, as if in anticipation of invisible guests. The bedrooms showcase antiqued beds while costumed mannequins stand in silent attendance.

Hawthorne did not actually live in this house. According to our tour guide, it was his cousin who lived there, and it was her stories of the strange occurrences in the house during his frequent visits to her that inspired him to write his famous novel.

Hawthorne's childhood home, however, looks quite similar. Transported from an older part of town, it is just a few steps away from The House of the Seven Gables.

Like the characters in his novel, Hawthorne was haunted by his past. To his lasting embarrassment, his great grandfather, John Hathorne, had been one of the judges who had sent the suspected witches to their trial. In an attempt to distance himself from this shameful past, Hawthorne added the "w" to his surname. While some books portray him as a bearded old man, he was actually quite handsome in his youth, as a portrait of him by Charles Osgood shows. He was said to be "handsomer than Lord Byron," and was married to Sophia Peabody, a talented artist with whom he had three children.

Within the complex is the prerequisite museum shop. I was thrilled to be able to buy the book "The House of the Seven Gables" in The House of the Seven Gables. The only thing lacking was for Hawthorne to pose for photographs and autograph the book.

Happy place

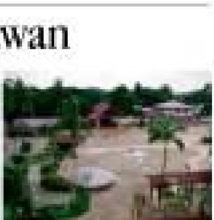

From the haunted and the historic, we drove to a happier place. Ye Olde Pepper Companie, said to be America's oldest candy company (it was founded in 1806). The store is a veritable wonderland of sweets, with tempting displays of bonbons, chocolates, lollipops, peppermints and candy-coated nuts.

Before I knew it, I had become the ... second bags of a pack of lemon drops, some butterballs, a package of maple syrup toffee, as well as some chocolate covered almonds, and was soon guzzling down a bottle of old fashioned root beer, which our tour guide Bob said we mustn't miss. Besides, he was right—the root beer tasted of vintage quality, as if it had been made by some mom-and-pop operation behind the store.

The tour of Salem included a side trip to Marblehead, an upscale community for well-heeled suburbanites. Situated along the New England coastline, Marblehead is like a storybook town. On one side of the winding road, ocean waves lash against craggy rocks that lead to a cliff. Across the road, within viewing distance of the sea, well-tended lawns front stately colonial and Georgian-style homes.

Driving further down, we came upon a lighthouse rising high above a vacant shore. It looks abandoned now but as it has done for decades, the lighthouse still keeps solitary watch over the sea, as if waiting for long gone seafarers to finally return home.

New designer fills in the Gap

ROBINSON. "Asian men are more daring. They don't think dressing up in a certain way would make them sexually oriented one way or the other."

Text and photos by Alex Y. Vergara

PATRICK ROBINSON'S mission to redefine a classic by making it more appealing and relevant to today's consumers was clear the minute he came on board as Gap's creative director in 2007. Two years on, the California-born Robinson continues to follow his marching orders as he unveiled last week the American retail chain's spring/summer 2010 collection in Tokyo.

The contradiction of an iconic American brand being launched in Japan wasn't lost on the charming Robinson, a surfer and Gap customer in his youth.

For decades, Gap rode on its heritage as an American classic known for its wholesome image, versatile and mid-priced clothes. But in recent years, sales hit snags as Gap lost market share due to waning consumer interest and fierce competition posed by the likes of Abercrombie & Fitch and H&M.

Teens and young adults suddenly found Gap jeans, one of the brand's core offerings, too [illegible], [illegible] and best consigned to weekends. That was until Robinson, who's married to Virginia Smith, Vogue's accessories director, came into the picture to deliberately set things up.

GAP'S current collection is heavy on Japanese vibe, thanks mainly to layering and offbeat pairings.

Weekend wear

"When I came in, all the denims (Gap offered) were perceived by consumers as just for weekends," said Robinson, who has worked for Giorgio Armani, Ralph Lauren and Perry Ellis. "My research confirmed this. The reality was people wear denims to work, to eat at expensive restaurants, to go on dates. Gap denims weren't made for that."

In an unprecedented move last August, Gap stores the world over cleared their shelves of those faded [illegible] to make room for Robinson's 1969 jeans line. Apart from a range of fabrics and washes, the new line offers men and women a range of fits and silhouettes unheard of in Gap's 40-year history.

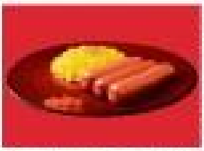

"When you think of a classic, you sort of think of taking the brand backwards," said Robinson, who, at 14, first realized he wanted to be a designer (not a doctor as he earlier dreamed) after seeing how effortless and nonchalantly stylish his fellow surfers were. "My job is not to take the brand backwards, but to take it squarely into today's culture. Brands survive only if they make people comfortable by address-

A healthy breakfast from CDO

Food manufacturer CDO Foodsphere Inc. has introduced a new hotdog product designed to provide Filipinos on the go with a healthy, yet delicious breakfast.

Expanding its fresh processed meat category, the 34-year-old company launched CDO Chicken Franks, a tasty and low-fat hotdog intended for consumers who prefer a healthy diet.

"It's a healthy alternative to pork and beef-based hotdogs," said Abigail Mercado, CDO assistant brand manager.

The new product is made of high-quality chicken meat, ideal for people who crave for healthy lifestyle, because of its less cholesterol, according to Mercado.

Scientific studies show that white meat, especially the lean variety used in Chicken Franks, does not have high level of fat, and does not contribute to high level of cholesterol.

"CDO Chicken Franks is best served with rice during breakfast that will surely be enjoyed by both kids and adults," said Mercado.

CDO Chicken Franks come in two pack sizes: the 500-gram Jumbo and the 250-gram regular. The product is now available in all stores and retail outlets.

The introduction of CDO Chicken Franks signifies the aggressive expansion of CDO Foodsphere.

It is one of the specialty products being churned out by the company's largest and modern manufacturing plant in Malvar, Batangas which was recently opened and expanded the company's production output by an additional 150,000 kilos of food products daily.

Aside from fresh meat processing, the company has diversified into other food-related businesses including meat canning, fruits bottling, water distilling, cheese production, mayonnaise processing and fish canning.

YAM LARANAS, THE FILIPINO FILMMAKER who remade his "Sigaw" as "The Echo" in Hollywood, has a new scream fest in the works: "Patient X," under GMA Films, Viva, and lead actor Richard Gutierrez's own RGutz Productions.

For Laranas, the trickiest part of "Patient X" was "coming up with a new twist on the 'aswang' myth ... which has been told a million times."

Laranas teamed up with scriptwriter Aloy Adlawan, who also penned "Dalaw," in putting a fresh spin on a "uniquely Filipino" horror story.

"Aloy and I came up with never-before-seen characteristics for the creatures," he noted. "The idea was: What if a real aswang was captured? How would people accept the fact that aswangs are real?"

Reunion

"Patient X" also serves as his reunion with "Sigaw" actor Gutierrez.

"Richard has grown a lot as an actor," said Laranas. "He was good in 'Sigaw' and he is much better in 'Patient X.' Everyone will surely notice that Richard's commitment to his craft has deepened."

His working relationship with Gutierrez has also evolved because the actor is a co-producer now.

"Richard is very hands-on," Laranas related. "I like that; he was there from the script stage ... which helps in developing his character. He is very collaborative and knows exactly what he wants. I'm actually looking for-
